The experience of passion in creation

Abstract

What I want to ask you this afternoon is whether the ragwort and the poppies of our battlefields are simply a kind of decorative relief to the squalor and heroism of human doings, whether nature is just a backdrop to how we comprehend God as dealing with us in our religious experience. What is the relationship between the waste of the natural world and those losses felt by ourselves? Do they count? Or do they find you – and God – dispassionate?

Item Type: Book

Additional Information: Series: RERC Second Series Occasional Papers;21.

Uncontrolled Keywords: Experience (Religion)

Subjects: B Philosophy. Psychology. Religion > B Philosophy (General)
B Philosophy. Psychology. Religion > BL Religion

Divisions: Alister Hardy Religious Experience Research Centre > Second Series of Occasional Papers

Depositing User: John Dalling

Date Deposited: 05 Nov 2014 16:12

Last Modified: 14 Aug 2018 14:04

URI: http://repository.uwtsd.ac.uk/id/eprint/416

Actions (login required)

- Edit Item

Research Repository is powered by EPrints which is developed by the School of Electronics and Computer Science, at the University of Southampton. More information and software credits.

In philosophy and religion the passions are the instinctive, emotional, primitive drives in a human being (including, for example, lust, anger, aggression and jealousy) which a human being must restrain, channel, develop and sublimate in order to be possessed of wisdom. Passions in religion and philosophy have a different connotation from the popular concept of passion which is generally seen as a positive emotion. The philosophical notion of passion, in contrast, is identified with innate or Experience of the universal passion. Since it includes all our desired qualities, naturally it's our deepest and most desired quality. The experience of the entire universe as one unit is Oneness. All our subjective experiences are manifestations of the universal passion. That includes other people and object. We are all manifestations of the universal passion. We tend to experience it as togetherness. Unity is the most important factor for evolution. The universal passion evolves when we develop 7 Passion in all areas of life. Survivors have had the experience of their voices being taken away. That feeling of invisibility is a response to the exposure to a set of events where it was not safe to voice one's boundaries or needs. Passion and dedication are the key components for our recipe of success. At the heart of our motivation and commitment, is our amazing community and their awe-inspiring support for everyone at Intrepid. Meet. Intrepid studios. Intrepid Studios was founded by Steven Sharif and John Moore, passionate gamers and successful entrepreneurs, who took their knowledge of business and passion for games and set out on a mission to make a gaming company that would build the games players want. Steven Sharif, set out to bring aboard a team of industry veterans, with a clear vision for the company's first project. These titans of the industry hail from many backgrounds, but all share two common threads: AAA MMORPG development experience, and a passion for building the games players want.